

Emotional processing prospectively modulates the impact of pandemic-related post-traumatic stress symptoms: an

Journal of Affective Disorders

303, 245-254

DOI: 10.1016/j.jad.2022.02.027

Citation Report

#	ARTICLE	IF	CITATIONS
1	Reduced heart rate variability and expressive suppression interact to prospectively predict COVID-19 pandemic-related post-traumatic stress symptoms. Scientific Reports , 2022, 12, .	1.6	1
2	Rethinking the risk for depression using the RDoC: A psychophysiological perspective. Frontiers in Psychology , 0, 14, .	1.1	3