

Weapon-related Cranial Lesions from Medieval and R

International Journal of Osteoarchaeology

25, 690-700

DOI: 10.1002/oa.2334

Citation Report

#	ARTICLE	IF	CITATIONS
1	Fantastic plastic? Experimental evaluation of polyurethane bone substitutes as proxies for human bone in trauma simulations. Legal Medicine , 2015, 17, 427-435.	0.6	37
2	Fighting to the Death: Weapon Injuries in a Mass Grave (16th–17th Century) from Bucharest, Romania. International Journal of Osteoarchaeology , 2017, 27, 106-118.	0.6	10
3	Sharp Force Trauma Death in a Young Individual From Medieval Gloucester. American Journal of Forensic Medicine and Pathology , 2017, 38, 111-114.	0.4	4
4	Getting to the point: An experimental approach to improving the identification of penetrating projectile trauma to bone caused by medieval arrows. Journal of Archaeological Science: Reports , 2017, 11, 274-286.	0.2	3
5	Differential diagnosis of the cranial perforations on the Early Iron Age along the Ancient Silk Road in Xinjiang, China. Archaeological and Anthropological Sciences , 2019, 11, 6829-6839.	0.7	0
6	Unthinking empiricism and the overdiagnosis of nonlethal cranial injuries: An interdisciplinary review of diagnostic criteria for healing, depressed cranial fractures. Journal of Archaeological Science: Reports , 2019, 27, 101939.	0.2	0
7	Perimortem sharp force trauma in an individual from the early medieval cemetery of SÄben-Sabiona in South Tyrol, Italy. International Journal of Paleopathology , 2019, 27, 46-55.	0.8	9
8	Trauma patterns and injury prevalence in early medieval SÄben-Sabiona, Italy. International Journal of Osteoarchaeology , 2021, 31, 820-832.	0.6	2
9	The death of a medieval Danish warrior. A case of bone trauma interpretation. Scandinavian Journal of Forensic Science , 2017, 23, 13-20.	1.0	5
10	Wounded to death. Holistic, multimodal reconstruction of the dynamics in a case of multiple perimortem cranial injuries from a medieval site in northern Italy. Journal of Archaeological Science: Reports , 2022, 46, 103643.	0.2	0
11	Stabbed to death: an osteobiography example of violence among Longobards (Povegliano Veronese, Italy). Journal of Archaeological Science: Reports , 2022, 46, 103643.	0.7	1